In its March 2010 issue, the Ebony® magazine feature "Take A Shot? Maybe Not" includes an interview with Curtis Cost and an excerpt from his controversial new book: Vaccines Are Dangerous. The article is in the Health & Fitness section of the magazine on page 130.

Mr. Cost's book challenges many longstanding assumptions about the safety and effectiveness of vaccines. The first edition of his book was published in 1992. His new book also takes on autism, H1N1, HIV/AIDS and other related health issues. Mr. Cost feels that there is an information gap in the African American and Hispanic communities with regards to vaccines.. His goal is to help bridge that gap by providing information on the risks and other problems linked to vaccines. The author believes that the only way for parents, college students and others to make informed decisions about vaccines is by knowing both sides of the argument. His book is thoroughly referenced and includes endorsements from doctors, scientists, nutritionists, scholars and others. Mr. Cost is the first African American to write a book questioning the practice of vaccination.

"Few individuals are as aware of the dangers of vaccines as Curtis Cost. He has been a fearless voice for truth; especially at a time when we need that truth. We are encouraged to take our vaccines. After reading Vaccines are Dangerous, you will be hard pressed to roll up your sleeves again."

Gary Null, PhD, National talk show host, New York Times bestseller

"Vaccines are Dangerous is a must read book by anyone who wants to protect themselves, their family, and others from the poisonous effects of vaccination."

Roberto Giraldo, M.D., Specialist in Internal Medicine

"Mr. Cost has opened the door to serious study.... In this work the brother has followed the best traditions of... Dr. John Henrik Clarke, Dr. Chancellor Williams and Dr. Amos Wilson."

Dr. Leonard Jefferies Jr., Professor of Africana Studies, Political Science
